Chair Notes

Dog days of summer? Late July and August may have lived up to that reputation by any number of standards in the Washington, D.C. metro area. But at Nova we have been refreshed, enriched, and inspired by the summer series on Catholic social teaching with Ken Himes, War and Peace (following the History of Catholic Social Teaching earlier in the summer); Bill Callahan, Liberation Theology; Ray Kemp, Biblical Justice; Jan Sullivan-Dockter, the Ministry of Money; and Joe McKenna, Racism: Psychological and Spiritual Implications. As you can imagine, we have just scratched the surface of these topics and look forward to exploring them further. We are deeply grateful to all of our presenters this summer, particularly to each of the very gifted members of the Padre Cadre who have been so generous with their time. If you missed any of these presentations or would just like to listen to them again, Ken Chaison has made them available to the Community on the Internet.

Indeed, some of our Community members may have missed at least part of the summer series as they traveled around the country and across the world...Africa, Europe and South America. Most notable among our travelers were our Affirmandi. Anna, Ben, Ilse, and Mali returned from their social action trip to El Salvador. Two continued their travels and we look forward to them all being back together in time to start school and to plan an opportunity to share their experiences with all of us who are eagerly waiting to hear about their journey.

Celebrations filled the August air as well. The women of the community celebrated Matthew Cambridge's arrival with a baby shower followed a couple weeks later by a community celebration of Marcelline and the many gifts she has showered on the community. What an enjoyable evening.....and time to be together as well with some members who we don't get to see as often as we would like.... Godspeed to Marcelline as she returns to Richmond.

This summer obviously has not been one for taking it easy for many Community members. The retreat planners are finishing plans for our annual retreat weekend at Shrinemont.....look for more details inside. This is always a not-to-be missed opportunity for community members to come together in the beautiful Shenandoah to relax and have fun while supporting each other on our spiritual journey. The 40th Anniversary subcommittees are working away to bring the many pieces together for the Community's 40th Anniversary weekend in January....not just your ordinary anniversary celebration as they invite us not only to celebrate 40 years as an Intentional Eucharistic Community but also to look toward the future.

As we turn toward September, the beginning of school is the harbinger of our return to Kenmore. We also pray for blessings upon our many students and teachers returning to elementary, high school, and college classrooms.

Namaste,

~Nancy Veldhuis

The U.N. has authorized a joint United Nations-African Union peacekeeping mission for Darfur. Now we must ensure that President Bush upholds the U.S. commitment to support this mission when the U.N. General Assembly meets in late September.

Our goal is to send 100,000 messages in the next three weeks urging the president to uphold our commitment.

Help us reach our goal! Click here now to send your message.

Although the UN-AU peacekeeping mission will not include U.S. troops, it will require U.S. funding, equipment, and diplomatic support to be effective. U.S. help will also be critical to promote a just and inclusive peace process.

Please make sure President Bush gets the message before the UN General Assembly meets on the 18th. Click here to urge President Bush to ensure the rapid deployment of peacekeepers to Darfur.

You helped secure the critical first step to ending the genocide - a U.N. Security Council Resolution authorizing peacekeepers for Darfur. Now we need your help at the General Assembly to make sure the resolution is implemented.

We have only three weeks before the U.N. General Assembly meets. Let's flood the White House with messages and urge President Bush to secure commitments for peacekeepers at the General Assembly.

Please help us spread the word - click here to use our Tell a Friend page to ask your friends and family to join you in taking action before the 18th.

Thank you again for your continued support at this critical moment for the people of Darfur.

[Editor's Note: If/when you click and take action, please verify your own name/email/etc. and make amend as necessary.]

100,000 emails in 3 weeks!

Urge President Bush to uphold U.S. commitments to the newly authorized Darfur peacekeeping mission.

Nova Affirmandi Return from El Salvador

"Good Morning!" shout some of the kids from my English class as we walk in, ready for another day of fun and lessons. El Salvador was a wonderful experience for me this summer. What other affirmation class gets to bond while hiking around volcanoes, getting stuck in the mud, seeing Oscar Romero sights, eating delicious pupusas and cereal with hot milk, and packing our rented van to the brim. With laughter and sometimes sweat (or maybe that was just rain), we were able to make the most of everything. The highlight for me was running the camp. As the time flew by, colorful murals went up on the wall, head-shoulders-knees-and-toes became a common background sound, and the ever anticipated soccer game on the basketball court in Ilobasco never got old. The kids were all special, and even though I've only had 2 years of Spanish in school and have very shaky control, language was seldom a barrier. The English lessons worked both ways, they'd teach me the Spanish word and I would teach them it in English - they loved that they weren't alone in having pronunciation problems! Thank you all for being so generous in your support of our trip! I wouldn't trade it for anything.

El Salvador Impressions

Welcome Home

Nova Affirmandi — El Salvador Impressions

Whenever anyone asks, “So, how was your trip with the Affirmandi to El Salvador?” My response is always, “I had the time of my life!” And then I fumble for words. How do I give you the vivid images, the flashes of sound, smell, touch, the experiences that begin with Oscar Romero and end with our own witness to the continued invisibility and powerlessness of campesinos and their children who are lively, bright, funny and dear?

We five travelers arrive in San Salvador with our clothes in carry-ons and, thanks to NOVA, ten suitcases full of books, school supplies, camp equipment and clothes to leave behind with the women and children of La Nueva Esperanza. There’s Ben loading the van and sitting among 15 suitcases—how, we wonder, will we also fit 4 adults and 4 teens once we leave for Ilobasco?

Our ten days begin with a drive through the teeming local markets to the cathedral where we light candles at Oscar Romero’s tomb, an amazingly moving bronze statue from the Sant’Egidio community. That night, high above the city, we eat our first pupusas in a park-like setting in a family atmosphere to live music and learn to play “Rock, Paper, Scissors” in Spanish.

The following day we stand where Romero was shot, looking out over an imagined congregation, wondering how he and they overcame fear to be together in the Eucharist and we visit his simple home along with a gaggle of kids preparing for their first communion, all suddenly quiet when they come upon his blood-stained garments. Later in the villages we will see huge paintings of him on the exterior walls, the back of trucks—alive to the people. That afternoon, after the Affirmandi have hiked the overgrown rim of a volcano, we experience the generosity and helpfulness of the campesinos as we get caught in a deluge and the van gets mired in the mud on the side of the mountain. What an adventure—ask any Aff!

Before camp starts we go to Joya de Ceren to see the excavated homes of the Mayan ancestors and begin to understand how people here used to live. Ilse steps up to the plate and does a fabulous job of interpreting for the crowd of 40 English speakers. We visit artesenas where we see the different crafts folks make and the Affirmandi go deep into the countryside to experience the life of the children we will have at camp and get to know some of them.

Suddenly, it’s camp! The young people have laid out supplies and carefully planned activities for their groups. From 8:30 am to 3:00 pm, they will each have 2 sessions with different age-groups, followed by a longer combined group in which Ilse and Ana do imagination and drama and Ben and Mali do sports. We lunch with the kids (hot food bought by Co-Partners) and then 2 more sessions of English class. No air conditioning, no glass in the windows, sewing machines hauled to the side walls, books for the new library set out within reach for all to use, the field for sports 4 blocks away and the huge water jug our Affirmandi insisted be available for children sits in the doorway with a

The story of camp is theirs to tell as it was 100% run by them. Do ask them.

Children from 6 to 12 came in from the campo in their finest clothes, ready and willing to try whatever the Affirmandi would have them do. Again and again our young people had to regroup and figure out new ways of communicating, of assessing what worked and what needed changing. Sunburns, insect bites and sweat-drenched T-shirts were the norm. There's Mali opening the suitcase of soccer jerseys and equipment she got donated, there are the kids posing proudly before the game, some with shirts to their knees, all thrilled. There's Ana teaching "Somos el barco" to her 8 & 9-year-olds and later leading all 35 children in "Head, Shoulders, Knees, and Toes" to the applause of the mothers. Ilse is preparing all grades for each putting on a play for the final day (I think one class wanted to do 3!) Face-painting is involved. Ben is helping the first graders learn to play Concentration, later intriguing the boys in his English class into learning a dialogue and competitive color-naming.

And suddenly it's the last day. Plays are acted, murals put up on the wall, photos taken, and the pinatas the Affirmandis bought and smuggled in for the kids are broken open to much shrieking delight. The mothers call all the volunteers up and thank us with loving words and a presentation of scapulas of the Virgen del Carmen ("we wear them to show we are Catholic and to keep away temptation") and wooden bracelets festooned with holy pictures. And there are tears and hugs as children separate from the Affirmandi, calling, "Please come back."

Farewell to our Residencia and our friends...

And to Archer and Jim Heinzen who made the trip possible — all this thanks to your caring support!

Muchisimas gracias!

Leer, South Sudan, July 26, 2007

Dear Carolyn & Ted, and NOVA Community:

I have been informed by the administrator of the Comboni Sisters of South Sudan that I have received your checks and audio tapes in Nairobi. For all of these thank you very much. I am sure that someone will bring them to us in Leer, as we will not go to Nairobi until the end of the year. I am in my hut and I am happy because it is raining and the seeds that we have planted are coming up. All these days the three of us have been cleaning up the land and planting maize, ground nuts, watermelons, papayas, beans, zucchinis, pumpkins and sweet potatoes.

The political situation here is still not stable, and this impacts all the nine states and the counties. We Comboni Sisters are in the Unity State and in Leer County. This state is in the Upper Nile and as you may imagine is rich in petroleum. Almost all of South Sudan has this "black gold" and therefore the conflict of powers will continue. Revenues of the oil production are not equally distributed and there is very little that we can see. The majority of people are getting frustrated. The schools are on and off. Here in Leer until now the only primary school has not yet opened. We hear that the headmaster and the educational director for Leer County have been suddenly replaced. With all of this happening, the situation is unstable and progress is slow. Only the traders and big merchants from the North are coming to make business and to bring the latest fashion of things and dressing to the people. The thousands of returnees have not been given land to establish themselves and their expectations in a free and peaceful South Sudan are gone. Please join us in prayer for peace and progress and better human conditions for the people of South Sudan, without forgetting Darfur!

There is some good news. We were just informed that our Adult for Change literacy Program will start tomorrow. We are especially encouraging women to go to school. We have concluded the acquisition of land for the church. We are in dialogue with the Ministry of Education to see which way we can get involved in education in Leer. We are dreaming of constructing a secondary school, literacy programs for women and to collaborate in training teachers. Meanwhile I am teaching English to two groups of adult women and men. The Sudanese people are thirsty for education. The culture is very strong and they count on the girls to bring cows when they marry. Here in Nuer-land a girl costs from 35 - 45 cows and if they are educated (maybe grade five or six) the parents of the girls are asked for more cows. The Nuer still practice polygamy and it is normal to visit families where two or three co-wives live together but separate. Due to the devastation of war, women have ended up brewing beer and selling it for quick cash. I am still struggling with the Nuer language. I thought it would be easy to learn but it is not so.

I must close as a seminarian is about to leave for Nairobi to take my letter. Please keep us in your prayers and ask for God's blessing on all of us. Thank all the NOVA Community for their generosity and all of you are in my heart and prayers. A big hug, con carino,

~Adriana
